SPEAKER: Leslie Citrome, MD, Clinical Professor, New York Medical College, and Adjunct Professor, Northwestern Feinberg School of Medicine

DESCRIPTION: Psychopharmacology Rounds is an educational series open to faculty and trainees who wish to get together in an open, in-person seminar format to discuss treatment guidelines with a hint of neurobiology and psychopharmacology approaches to a variety of psychiatric disorders. The hope is that by organizing and leading a discussion, we as a group can ensure we are up to date and ideally on the cutting edge of medication management approaches regarding DSM disorders.

TITLE: When Ungrieved Sorrow Pervades Personality: Working with Depressive and Self-Defeating Patterns

SPEAKER: Nancy McWilliams, PhD, ABPP, Psychoanalyst, Visiting Professor Emerita, Rutgers Graduate School of Applied & Professional Psychology
DESCRIPTION: Situational stresses interact with personality patterns, presenting clinicians with complicated combinations of grief, mourning, and depressive and self-defeating (also called masochistic) dynamics. Because neither “Depressive Personality Disorder” nor “Self-Defeating Personality Disorder” is included in the DSM or ICD, official taxonomies offer little help to therapists in distinguishing between various painful self-states and framing psychotherapy accordingly. Dr. McWilliams will differentiate conceptually between depression and mourning, between anaclitic and introjective depression, and between depressive and self-defeating personality patterns, emphasizing the therapeutic implications of such distinctions.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES: Following this activity, the participants should be able to:

1. Differentiate normal sadness and grief from clinical depression
2. Distinguish between depressive and self-defeating personality styles and disorders.
3. Articulate two clinical implications of these distinction.

Faculty disclosure: Dr. McWilliams has no relevant financial relationships with ineligible companies.
